half (hɑ:f), a. Forms: 1 healf, hælf, 1- half; also 5 halve, alfe, halff, 5-7 halfe. [Common Teut.: OE. healf, half = OFris, OS. (MDu., Du., LG.) half, OHG. and Ger. halb, ON. halfr, (Sw. half, Da. halv), Goth. halbs:—OTeut. halƀoz*; not known outside Teutonic. The appearance of 'side' as the oldest sense of HALF sb. makes the original meaning of the adj. uncertain.]

1. Being one of the two equal parts into which a thing is or may be divided; forming a half or moiety.

a. immediately preceding the sb., and preceded by a defining word (demonstrative or possessive, genitive case, etc.), as a half length, his half share; half sheet. See also half-sheet s.v. HALF- II. n.

When the two words constitute a recognized unit or individual, half is usually hyphened to the sb., as in half-crown: see HALF- II. The limits are necessarily undefined and vague, and the use of the hyphen is a matter of perspicuity in the particular connexion.

b. separated from the sb. by demonstrative or defining words, as half the length, half my family. (Formerly sometimes following the sb.)

The adj. character of half appears in OE. and early ME. by its inflexion; in mod. use it is sometimes viewed as a sb. with of suppressed, as in 'half (half of, one half of) the men were sick, a quarter or a third of them seriously ill': cf. also quot. 1667.

When these are viewed as independent numbers, amounts, coins, etc., half is preceded by a, the, etc. and hyphened to the sb., as a half-dozen, the half-bushel, his half-pound, a long half-hour, a bad half-crown: see HALF- II. A half-crown is the former silver coin worth 2*s.* 6*d.*; half a crown included the equivalent amount in any coins, e.g. in five sixpences.

†2. half, preceded or followed by an ordinal numeral, was formerly used to express a half-unit less than the corresponding cardinal number; thus OE. þridda healf, ME. thridde half or half thrid = two and a half. Obs.

This is an ancient Teutonic mode of reckoning: cf. Ger. anderthalb (= OE. oðer healf), dritte halb, etc. In English it is scarcely found after 1300. The expression is explained in quot. 811 as elliptical: 'two (whole) messuages and a third half-messuage', contracted to ðridda half haȝa. Hence the following sb. was originally singular, ðridde half hýd = two and a half hide. As in Old Norse, etc., half was either declined as an adj. (quot. 891), or stood in the uninflected combining form.

3. not half: a long way from the due amount; to a very slight extent; in mod. slang and colloq. use = not at all, the reverse of, as 'not half bad' = not at all bad, rather good; 'not half a bad fellow' = a good fellow; 'not half long enough' = not nearly long enough; also (slang), extremely, violently, as 'he didn't half swear'.

4. Idiomatic uses, in which half is now adverbial, though probably originally the adj. or sb.

a. In stating the time of day, half past (or after) one or one o'clock, etc. = half an hour past the hour named. (In Scotland, 'half' is often prefixed to the following hour, as in Ger. halb elf, etc.)

1750 G. B. DODDINGTON Diary (1785) 74 Just at half past twelve she was delivered of a Prince. a 1791 GROSE Olio (1796) 107 C. Pray what's o' clock? W. It will be half ten. 1818 JAS. Johnstone* 294 Flucker informed her that the nock said 'half eleven'—Scotch for 'half-past-ten'. 1891 Murray's Mag. Apr. 445 It was half after eight o'clock one evening.

b. Naut. Between the names of two points of the compass, half = half a point (i.e. $5\frac{5}{8}°$) from the first towards the second point mentioned.

1726 SHELVOCKE Voy. round World (1757) 17 Bearing South East half East, distant six leagues. 1893 EARL DUNMORE Pamirs I. 252 We .. altered our course from north to east half-south by the compass.

c. Naut. In soundings, half before a numeral adds half to it; thus half four = $4\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms.

1809 TREMENHEERE in Naval Chron. XXIII. 191 The ship .. shoaled her water to a half three. 1840 MARRYAT Poor Jack xlvii, We shall have half four directly, and after that the water will deepen. c 1860 H. STUART Seaman's Catech. 43 Suppose $4\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms, what soundings would you call? And a half four.

half-, in comb. [OE. half-, healf-, was regularly combined with an adj. or pple., as in healfewic, healfdéad, healfhwít, healfréad, healfsoden, healfslǽpiende; also with a sb., as healfhéafod forehead, healfmann, healfpeniġ, healftrendel hemisphere. In OTeut. halb- appears to have been a later substitute for the original sāmi-, OE. sam-, as in OHG. sâmiquec, OS. sâmquic, OE. samcwic half alive, so sambærnd half-burnt, sambrice a half-breach; = L. sēmi- in sēmidoctus, sēmivīvus, sēmicoctus, sēmideus, sēmihomo, etc.; Gr. ἡμι- in ἡμιβάρβαρος, ἡμιπλήρης, ἡμιάνθρωπος, ἡμίθεος, etc.; Skr. sāmi, in sāmijīwas half alive, etc.]

I. 1. With adjectives and pa. pples. Already in OE.: see above. Very common in later use, esp. with pa. pples., to which half- may be prefixed whenever the sense suits: e.g. half-afraid, -awake, -blind, -crazy, -deaf, -drunk, -full, -human, -learned, -mad, -open, -raw, -ripe, -savage, -true; half-armed, -ashamed, -bent, -buried, -cured, -disposed, -done, -dressed, -eaten, -educated, -finished, -formed, -hidden, -opened, -roasted, -ruined, etc., etc. With adjs. expressing shape, it implies the form of half the figure, as half-cordate, -sagittate, -terete.

The two elements are often written separately when the adj. is in the predicate (see HALF adv. 1); the use of the hyphen mostly implies a feeling of closer unity of notion in the compound attribute, as in half-blind, half-dressed, half-raw, viewed as definite states; but it is often merely for greater syntactical perspicuity, on which ground it is regularly used when the adjective is attributive, thus I am half dead (or half-dead) with cold; a half-dead dog.

II. In attributive relation to a sb.

Of these there were already a few instances in OE. (e.g. healfmann 'semivir', healfpeniġ, healftrendel hemisphere); their number has been enormously increased in later times, especially through the practice of hyphening an adjective and substantive when these have a special or individualized application. These combinations may be distributed among the following classes:

In attributive relation to a sb. a. In names of Coins, Weights, Measures of space, quantity, time, etc., as half-barrel, -bit, -bottle, -caser [CASER[2]], -cent, -cooper, -farthing, -firkin, -florin, -foot, -hogshead, -inch, -joe, -litre, -mile, -mutchkin, -peck, -pint (also ellipt., a half-pint of beer; see also sense n below), -pipe, -pound, -quarter, -quartern, -tierce. Cf. DEMI- 7. Also HALF-ANGEL, -CROWN, -DOLLAR, -HOUR, -MINUTE, etc. These forms may also be used attrib. as in half-inch board, half-mile race, half-quartern loaf, etc.

After the decimalization of the U.K. coinage in 1971, halfpenny was often written as two words and pronounced ('hɑ:f 'penɪ). It was demonetized on 31 Dec. 1984.

4. A term applied, esp. in the English universities, to a building or buildings set apart for the residence or instruction of students, and, by transference, to the body of students occupying it. a. Originally applied at Oxford and Cambridge to all residences of students, including the Colleges when these came to be founded. Now only Hist., arch., or poetic for 'academic buildings'.

At Cambridge this use survived till modern times, when some of the smaller colleges, though corporations, were still called halls; the older designation survives, for distinction's sake, in the name of Trinity Hall.

b. After the institution of the colleges, applied specifically to those buildings and societies which, unlike the colleges, were governed by a head only (and not by head and fellows), and whose property was held in trust for them, they not being bodies corporate. (Cf. COLLEGE 4.)

The 'Halls' were originally very numerous, but in Queen Elizabeth's time only eight remained in Oxford, and they are now almost extinct.

c. In recent times applied to buildings in University towns, established, whether by the Universities or not, for the use of students in the higher learning, sometimes enjoying the privileges of the University and sometimes not: e.g. at Oxford, private halls for the residence of undergraduate members of the University, under the charge of a member of Convocation; theological halls (e.g. Wycliffe Hall), halls for women students (e.g. Somerville Hall, Lady Margaret Hall).

For the last two classes the name 'college' has also been assumed: see COLLEGE 4 e.

Divinity Hall, the name applied to the theological department of the Scottish Universities, and to the theological colleges of the Nonconformist churches.

Ger. der heilige, die heiligen, L. sanctus, It. santo, F. saint.) The -en plural was retained in the south during the ME. period, while halwes appeared in midl. and north before 1300. In the radical form háliȝ, the á became regularly ō, and the iȝ became -y; but in hálȝa the consonant group caused shortening of the á to a, and the ȝ before a back-vowel produced w, between which and the l was developed o, as in arrow, widow, etc. Cf. handicap ('hændɪkæp), sb. [A word of obscure history. Two examples of the sb., and one of the verb, are known in 17th c.; its connexion with horse-racing appears in the 18th; its transferred general use, esp. in the verb, since 1850. It appears to have originated in the phrase 'hand i' cap', or 'hand in the cap', with reference to the drawing mentioned in sense 1.]

1. The name of a kind of sport having an element of chance in it, in which one person challenged some article belonging to another, for which he offered something of his own in exchange. (Also fig.)

On the challenge being entertained, an umpire was chosen to decree the difference of value between the two articles, and all three parties deposited forfeit-money in a cap or hat. The umpire then pronounced his award as to the 'boot' or odds to be given with the inferior article, on hearing which the two other parties drew out full or empty hands to denote their acceptance or non-acceptance of the match in terms of the award. If the two were found to agree in holding the match either 'on' or 'off', the whole of the money deposited was taken by the umpire; but if not, by the party who was willing that the match should stand. (See Notes & Queries 23 June, 1855).

This sport is described under the name of Newe Faire, in Piers Plowman A. v. 171, B. v. 328, C. VII. 377, where 'Clement þe cobelere caste of his cloke', for which 'Hikke þe hakeneyman' wagered his hood, and 'Robyn þe ropere' was named for 'a noumpere', to ordain how much 'who-so haueth the hood shuld haue amendes of the cloke'. For reference to a similar sport in Scandinavia and Germany (where called Freimarkt), see Germania XIX. (1847) 1, Engl. Stud. V. 150. A recent example occurs in R. S. Surtees 'Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour' ch. xlv, in which the challenge is between a gold watch and a horse. In later times the result became the subject of further betting on the part of the bystanders: see The Sportsman 17 April 1897, 5/5.

2. Horse-racing. (orig. attrib.) †a. handicap match: a match between two horses, the arrangement of which was made in accordance with the sport of handicap in 1, the umpire here decreeing the extra weight to be carried by the superior horse, and the parties drawing as in 1 to declare whether the match should be 'on' or 'off', with the same chances as to the forfeit-money. Obs.

(Such matches are recorded as early as 1680, but the term 'handicap' does not appear.)

1754 Pond's Racing Calendar p. xxxii, Rules concerning Racing in general, with a Description of a Post and Handy-Cap Match..A Handy-Cap Match, if for A. B. and C. to put an equal Sum into a Hat, C, which is the HandyCapper, makes a Match for A. and B. which when perused by them, they put their Hands into their Pockets and draw them out closed, then they open them together, and if both have Money in their Hands, the Match is confirm'd; if neither have Money, it is no Match: In both Cases the Hand-Capper draws all the Money out of the Hat; but if one has Money in his Hand, and the other none, then it is no Match; and he that has the Money in his Hand is intitled to the Deposit in the Hat. If a Match is made without the Weight being mentioned, each Horse must carry ten Stone. [So in 'Rules of Racing' in Racing Calendar 1826, and Blaine Encycl. Rural Sports ed. 1832.]

b. handicap race (shortened handicap): a horse-race in which an umpire (the handicapper) decrees what weights have to be carried by the various horses entered, according to his judgement of their merits, in order to equalize their chances. There is no beast so miserable, but that he may possibly succeed in a handicap. 187. Rules of Racing in J. Rice Hist. Brit. Turf (1879) II. 367 A 'handicap' is a race in which the weights which the horses are to carry are to be adjusted after the time limited for entering or naming, according to the handicapper's judgment of the merits of the horses, for the purpose of equalizing their chances of winning..A free handicap is one in which no liability for stake or forfeit is incurred until acceptance, and no entry need be made.

3. Any race or competition in which the chances of the competitors are sought to be equalized by giving an advantage to the less efficient or imposing a disadvantage upon the more efficient.

Besides the method of weighting, as in 2, this may be done in various ways, according to the nature of the game, as by requiring the superior competitor to accomplish a greater distance (i.e. giving a start to the inferior), to do it in a shorter time, to play with fewer men or pieces, etc.

HEATH Croquet Player 87 There is a variety called Time Handicaps, in which, if the game be not concluded at the expiration of a given time, the player who is ahead wins. 1895 Badminton Libr., Billards 439 No two men should play in the same handicap when one can give the other much more than a third of the game.

4. The extra weight or other condition imposed on a superior in favour of an inferior competitor in any athletic or other match; hence, any encumbrance or disability that weighs upon effort and makes success more difficult.

1868 BREWER Phr. & Fable, Handicap, a game at cards not unlike Loo, but with this difference—the winner of one trick has to put in a double stake, the winner of two tricks a triple stake, and so on. Thus: if six persons are playing, and the general stake is 1s., and A gains three tricks, he gains 6s., and has to 'hand i' the cap' or pool, 3s. for the next deal. Suppose A gains two tricks and B one, then A gains 4s. and B 2s., and A has to stake 3s. and B 2s. for the next deal. [No confirmation has been found.]

hang (hæŋ), v. Pa. t. and pple. hung (hʌŋ), hanged (hæŋd). Forms: see below. [The history of this word involves that of two OE. and one ON. verb; viz. (1) the OE. str. hón (:—hâhan), heng (? héng), hangen, (hǫngen), trans.; (2) the OE. weak hangian, hangode, -od, (also hǫng-), intr. = OFris. hangia, OS. hangôn (for OHG. hangên); (3) the ON. causal vb. hængjan trans. = OHG. hęngan, MHG., MDu. hengen. OE. hón = OS. and OHG. hâhan, MHG. hâhen, hân, MLG. hân, MDu. haen, represented the OTeut. reduplicating vb., with consonant-exchange (grammatischer wechsel), hâhan (from earlier haŋhan*), hehâh (pl. hehaŋgun), haŋgan-, in Gothic, hâhan, haihâh, haihâhun, hâhan- (levelled under the present tense form). In WGer. and Norse, the pa. t. had the type heŋg: OS. heng, OHG. hiang, MHG. hienc, Ger. hing, ON. hekk, pl. hengu; OE. heng (? héng), ME. heng, hieng, heyng, hing. The pa. pple. hangen also varied in OE. and ME. with hǫngen (as in lang, long, etc.). Already in ON. the present stem hâh- had been ousted by the weak form hanga, and in the Middle period a similar change took place in all the WGer. langs.: MHG. hâhen, hangen, MDu. hâen, hangen, ME. hôn, hangen (hongen). This identified the old trans. vb. with the intr. hangian, hongian, so that both had now for the pres. t. hang (hong); in consequence of which the strong pa. t. and pa. pple. heng (hing), hangen (hongen), and the weak forms, hangede (hongede), -ed, became also generally confounded in sense, and (with some exceptions) used indiscriminately. Meanwhile the ON. causal verb hængja came into northern Eng. as heng(e, also (with Eng. change of (-eŋ) to (-ɪŋ)), hing; at first app. with weak inflexion and trans. sense, hengde, henged, hingde, hinged; but soon, by assimilation to the 3rd ablaut-class of str. verbs, with a pa. t. hang, varying in north. midl. with hong, both trans. and intr. At this period (13–15th c.), therefore, while the south had pres. t. hang, hong, and pa. heng, hing, the north had conversely pres. heng, hing, pa. hang, hong. Finally the northern inflexion hing, hang, was completed by the pa. pple. hung, which in the 16th c. penetrated into general Eng.; where arose a new pa. t. hung (like sing, sung, sung), in presence of which the earlier heng, hing, and hong became obs. The weak inflexion hanged however continued in use (being the only one used in Bible versions from Coverdale to 1611, though Tindale had also houng); but was gradually superseded by hung in the general sense, trans. and intr., leaving hanged only in the special trans. sense (3) 'put to death by hanging', owing prob. to the retention of this archaic form by judges in pronouncing capital sentences. The distinction is found already in Shakspere, and is established in the objurgatory expressions 'You be hanged!' 'I'll be hanged if I do', and the like. Nevertheless southern speakers and writers still often say 'the man was hung' instead of 'hanged'. In the northern dialects, on the other hand, the distinction runs all through the verb, the special sense 'put to death by hanging' being expressed by hang, hang'd, hang'd, while the general verb is hing, hang, hung; the present tense hing extends into England as far south as Northamptonshire: see A. 1 ε, quot. 1821. In those dialects, therefore, hing and hang are distinct verbs, differing both in sense and inflexion; but in Standard English, there being only the single form hang for the present tense, it is necessary to treat all the forms together. (Hang is parallel in inflexion to FANG v.)

The distinction of trans. and intr. has always tended to break down. The strong verb was orig. trans. in WGer. and in OE., hangian being the intr.; but in ON., hanga, hekk, hangenn was intr., and the causal hengja trans.; hengen is only trans in Ormin, but Cursor M. and Hampole have heng, hing, both trans. and intr., like the contemporary southern hang, hong. Cf. also mod. Ger., in which the true intr. hangen is archaic, and ordinarily superseded by the trans. hängen, though the pa. tenses hing intr. and hängte trans. remain distinct in use.]

1900 E. F. BASHFORD tr. P. Ehrlich in Proc. R. Soc. LXVI. 448 The sifting of the material obtained by observation is rendered more difficult by the occurrence under normal conditions of a great number of quite unlooked for bodies furnished with haptophore groups and arising from diverse organs, and which we may designate collectively as haptines. 1902 Brit. Med. Jrnl. 12 Apr. 918/1 Every normally functionating cell throws off large numbers of side chains, either as isolated complexes, or in connection with complement. These side chains are spoken of as haptines (Ehrlich). 1932 HEWLETT & MCINTOSH Man. Bacteriol. (ed. 9) v. 168 Ehrlich termed the diverse free receptors which occur in the body fluids in various circumstances 'haptines'.

haptoglobin (hæptəʊ'gləʊbɪn). Biochem. [ad. F. haptoglobine (Polonovski & Jayle 1940, in Compt. Rend. CCXI. 518), f. Gr. ἅπτειν to fasten + HÆM)OGLOBIN.] Any of several proteins of the a_2-globulin group that occur in blood serum and are able to combine with free hæmoglobin to form fairly stable complexes.

1941 in Index Medicus XXIX. 190/2. 1956 Nature 29 Sept. 695/1 Since differences in the haptoglobins of individuals determine their inherited serum groups, we suggest that the system comprising these groups be known as the 'haptoglobin system'. 1961 Lancet 23 Sept. 722/1 Normal sera contain three types of haptoglobins, which are now known to occur in three genetically controlled combinations. 1966 E. S. WEST et al. Textbk. Biochem. (ed. 4) xv. 573 Only the haptoglobins of types 1-1 and 2-2 have been shown to be homogeneous compounds... Type 2-1 haptoglobin has been found to be heterogeneous by ultracentrifugation.

haptophore ('hæptəʊfɔə(r)), a. (and sb.) Immunol. Also -phor. [a. G. haptophor (P. Ehrlich 1898, in Deutsch. med. Wochenschr. 22 Sept. 599/2), f. Gr. ἅπτειν to fasten + -O + -PHORE.] Applied, in Ehrlich's theory of immunization, to that group of atoms in the molecule of a toxin or other substance which enables it to combine with the corresponding receptors of a cell. Also absol. So hapto'phoric, hap'tophorous adjs.

1899 tr. P. Ehrlich in Trans. Jenner Inst. Prevent. Med. (2nd Ser.) 11, I have already..touched upon the question whether..the toxin molecule contains two independent groups, of which the one (the toxophore) conditions the toxicity, and the other (the haptophore) the combining property. Ibid. 12 With the help of the haptophore groups, the toxin molecule becomes 'anchored' to the cell. 1902 VAUGHAN & NOVY Cellular Toxins (ed. 4) 182 Both the toxophil groups of the cell, and the cytophil groups of the toxin may be designated as haptophorous bodies. 1902 Brit. Med. Jrnl. 29 Mar. 785 The atom arrangement, or group in the toxin, which corresponds to the receptor, he [sc. Ehrlich] calls the 'haptophoric group'. 1904 Ibid. 10 Sept. 574 Although the toxophoric group may be similar, the haptophor is dissimilar. 1938 W. BULLOCH Hist. Bacteriol. xi. 275 Of the two, the haptophore is the more stable. Ehrlich considered that the toxophoric atom group can deteriorate to a non-toxic state although the haptophoric group may at the same time remain unchanged. 1960 New Biol. XXXI. 104 It was very hard to conceive that 'haptophores' could pre-exist.

haptotropism (ˌhæptəʊ'trəʊpɪz(ə)m, -'trɒpɪz(ə)m, hæp'tɒtrəpɪz(ə)m). Bot. [ad. G. haptotropismus (L. Errera 1884, in Bot. Zeitung 5 Sept. 564), f. Gr. ἅπτειν to fasten: see TROPISM.] The phenomenon whereby plant organs, as the tendrils of climbing plants, exhibit tropic movements in response to the stimulus of touch. Hence hapto'tropic a.

1892 L. ERRERA in Ann. Bot. VI. 373 Thus, the geotropic, heliotropic, hydrotropic, haptotropic curvatures arise, which are familiar to vegetable physiologists. 1900 B. D. JACKSON Gloss. Bot. Terms 118/2 Haptotropism, curvature induced in climbing plants by the stimulus of a rough surface. 1924 M. SKENE Biol. Flowering Plants iv. 298 The response to contact stimulus is termed haptotropism. 1934 WEBSTER, Haptotropic. 1953 FRITSCH & SALISBURY Plant Form & Funct. (rev. ed.) XXIX. 263 Certain tropic growth-curvatures result from direct contact with a foreign body and are described as haptotropic. 1965 BELL & COOMBE tr. *Strasburger's Textbk. The ME. word has been assumed to be from Norse; but the phonology points rather to an OE. type (original, or perh. after the Norse). The subsequent history shows two lines of phonetic change, viz. the change of her- to har-, usual with er- before a consonant (as in bark, barrow, hart, marsh, and the pronunciation of clerk, sergeant, Berkshire, Hertford, etc.); and the weakening of the second element to -ber, -bor, -bour; the current harbour exhibits both of these changes. The late ME. form remains in place names, e.g. Market Harborough.

Harbour is now the standard spelling of both the noun and the verb in the U.K., while harbor prevails in the United States.]

I. 1. a. A character in Italian comedy, subsequently in French light comedy; in English pantomime a mute character supposed to be invisible to the clown and pantaloon; he has many attributes of the clown (his rival in the affections of Columbine) with the addition of mischievous intrigue; he usually wears particoloured bespangled tights and a visor, and carries a light 'bat' of lath as a magic wand.

(In reference to quot. 1590, it may be noticed that the arlecchino is said, in Italian Dictionaries, to have originally represented the simple and facetious Bergamese manservant. Cf. the stage Irishman.)

(This application, which originated with the ancient Pythagoreans, is generally held to have arisen from the fact that a string or other sonorous body, divided into segments whose lengths are $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{3}$, $\frac{1}{4}$, etc. of the total length, gives a definite series of musical notes whose relations are of fundamental importance in harmony; see A. 4, B. 2.)

Breton harnez (in this sense) is prob. from French.

In the obscurity that surrounds the origin of the word, the primary sense and the order of sense-development remain uncertain. Sp. arcabuz); under the influence of the It., the earlier French name haquebute (see HACKBUT) was changed through the intermediate harquebute, harquebuse, to arquebuse. These French forms were in turn adopted in English, where also the influence of the earlier hackbush, hagbush, gave rise to the mixed forms harquebush, hargubush, harguebusse, etc.]

1. The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and afterwards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage'; but the name became generic for portable fire-arms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebuse à croc: see 2.

According to Wendelin Boeheim, Handbuch der Waffenkunde (Leipzig 1890) 447, 455, the hook of the original hakenbühse was intended to hold on to a wall or other fixed object, partly to support the weight of the barrel and partly to diminish the recoil. Maximilian I (early 16th cent.) introduced the portable tripod which could be put together in the field. The forked rest came in about 1520, with the Spanish musket.

(As this was exactly the original hakenbühse, the addition à crac, 'with hook', was doubtless made after the etymological meaning of haquebute or arquebuse was forgotten, and the name extended to fire-arms which had no haken or croc. Littré identifies the croc with the fourchette or rest, but one of his quotations has 'chacun une harquebuse à croc sans fourchette' and another explains the use of the croc: 'harquebuses à croc, que l'on ne peut bien tirer si elles ne sont liées et accrochées sur du bois', tied and hooked upon wood.)
